四、閱讀測驗【請在下列各題中選出最適當的答案】

It can be argued that music is a core function in our brains. Our brains are wired from the beginning to process and understand music. Yet music has always been sort of mystery, especially since it's not typically considered " necessary " for survival. That is reserved for the trifecta of food, sex, and sleep.

A study came out this month that adds another important piece of information as we continue to figure out how our brain processes music. When we satisfy our desire to eat, sleep, or reproduce, our brain releases dopamine —the "feel-good" neurochemical involved when we experience pleasure and reward. It turns out this same chemical is released when listening to music.

A study was conducted by researchers at McGill University in Canada. The researchers used a combination of PET (positron emission tomography) and fMRI (functional magnetic resonance imagining) techniques to scan the brains of the eight participants as they listened to music over the course of three sessions. In addition, the participants completed a questionnaire in which they rated how pleasurable they found the music.

It turns out that when we anticipate and then actually experience a pleasurable response while listening to music, our brain reacts in distinct and specific ways to release the "feel-good" chemical dopamine.

From an academic standpoint, this is a fascinating study. According to the researchers, this may be the first study to show that an abstract reward, such as listening to music, releases dopamine. We've traditionally considered abstract rewards to be processed a more cognitive level, but this study shows that our ancient reward circuits can be involved.

Additionally, it points to a shared neural network involving tangible and abstract rewards. We already know that skills such as speech production use shared neural networks to those used to sing. This study shows the shared neural circuitry involving how our reward circuits process both tangible and abstract rewards.

From a practical standpoint, this will not affect your average day-to-day listening. Just knowthat when you experience an emotion while listening to music, your ancient reward circuits are flooding your brain with a chemical designed to make you feel good.

(4)46. What is the main idea of this article?

(1)Concrete

- (1) Explaining the details of a research in Canada
- (2) Explaining the importance of food, sleep, and sex
- (3) Explaining the main purpose of neural networks
- (4) Explaining the relation between dopamine and music
- (1)47. According to the article, which of the following statements is true?
  - (1) Music is the first found abstract trigger for dopamine production.
  - (2) The study shows that rewards are processed on a higher cognitive level.
  - (3) The neural networks used for speech production and singing are different.

(2)Disgraceful

(2)49.According to the article, which of the following is NOT true about dopamine?

- (4) Music is proven in the experiment tobe the fourth necessity for our survival.
- (1)48. Which of the following is closest in meaning to the word tangible in the sixth paragraph?

- (1) It is also known to be the "feel-good" neurochemical.
  - (2) It shares neural networks with speech production and singing.
  - (3) It was traditionally thought to be related to food, sex, and sleep.
  - (4)It is evoked when we anticipate and experience pleasurable music.
- (1)50. According to the article, what does the "ancient reward circuits" refer to?
