Music industry executives have been making an unusual pilgrimage to Coca-Cola's Atlanta headquarters, a telling measure of the company's successful World Cup soccer marketing 11. They want to learn how Coke turned a song called Wavin' Flag by a little-known Somali-Canadian hip-hop artist into a World Cup anthem and No.1 iTunes hit in 17 countries in less than a year." They are getting on planes from New York, from U.K., from Los Angeles," says Joe Belliotti, Coke's director of global entertainment. "Word of mouth is a great thing in the music industry."

Initially, Coke had hoped only to create a World Cup song good enough to 12 stadiums full of soccer fans to sing along. To get there, it 13 an unusual partnership with singer-songwriter K'naan and his label, A&M / Octone Records, that has ended up changing the way Coke works with entertainment companies. The song was the musical 14 of Coca-Cola's largest marketing campaign ever, reaching 160 countries. A smaller effort four years ago at the World Cup in Germany helped 15 volume sales of drinks in Cola's largest markets an average of 6 percent, says Emmanuel Seuge, who runs worldwide sports and entertainment marketing. Cola's goal was even higher - volume sales gains during the 2010 World Cup campaign, he says. Coke also expects gains in consumer perception scores.

四、閱讀測驗

Who would have thought that the fountain of youth spouts... milk? But that's the striking suggestion from a recent study at the Karolinska Institute in Stockholm. Researchers followed more than 230,000 middle-aged and older men for a decade and found that those who reported getting plenty of calcium in their diet, about 2,000 mg per day, were 25 percent less likely to die in that time than men who consumed little of the mineral in food and drink. It's possible that the high-calcium diners had other healthy habits, the researchers say. But a diet containing lots of the mineral is known to lower blood pressure, cholesterol and blood sugar levels.

The Swedish study was all-male, but calcium expert Robert P. Heaney, MD, at Omaha's Creighton University, thinks the results are likely to apply to women too. He suggests all adults aim for 2,000 mg of calcium per day-from food, if possible, because other nutrients amplify its effect. American adults get only about 700 mg of calcium in their diet each day, on average. But it's easy to sneak more into your menu. Drinking milk with meals gets you about 300 mg of calcium per eight-ounce glass; if you're lactose-intolerant, yogurt (up to 450 mg per cup of low-fat) and cheese

(410 mg per half cup of shredded Cheddar) are easier to digest. You can also try the less obvious sources, such as spinach (245 mg per cup), broccoli (62 mg per cup), fortified soy milk (299 mg per 8 ounces) and almonds (190 mg per halfcup).

(4)16. which of the following is the best title for the passage above?

- (1) Calcium : A consumable mineral
- (2) Calcium strengthens Your Bones
- (3) Calcium Substitute Choices
- (4) Calcium : A key to Long Life

(1)17. Which of the following is NOT true about the study discussed above?

- (1) It is not applicable to female participants.
- (2) Sufficient calcium intake may help to reduce coronary artery problems.
- (3) Women are not studied in the research.
- (4) In order to use the benefits of calcium, one has to take plenty of it.

(2)18. What source of calcium is NOT recommended to a lactose-intolerant person?

- (1) Yogurt
- (2) Milk
- (3) Broccoli
- (4) Soy milk

(2)19. Why is it suggested to get calcium from food?

- (1) It is easier to devise an effective calcium-based menu.
- (2) Other nutrients in food can enhance the effect of calcium.
- (3) Drinking milk with meals is more convenient.
- (4) Calcium is easily missing after it's heated.

(3)20. Which of the following dietary plans can ensure sufficient calcium intake?

- (1) Two eight-ounce glasses of milk per day, two cups of broccoli, and a half cup of almonds
- (2) Two respective cups of cooked spinach and broccoli, and one cup of almonds
- (3) Two eight -ounce glasses of milk and fortified soy milk respectively, two cup of spinach and one cup of low-fat yogurt
- (4) A quarter cup of shredded Cheddar and one eight-ounce glass of fortified so milk
